

Voice on the Go[®] Signs Another Bluetooth Headset Partner Now More Bluetooth Users Can Listen To & Send Text By Voice While Driving

Toronto, Ontario – February 12, 2010 – Voice on the Go, the world leader in hands-free email and texting by voice, today announced that they have signed their 10th Bluetooth Headset partnership deal.

Drivers are now realizing that a Bluetooth headset alone does not comply with the new “texting while driving” laws. When used with a Bluetooth device, Voice on the Go provides a complete hands-free voice application for drivers to listen to their email and send text hands-free, by voice, all with the push of a button on their Bluetooth headset.

“The market has been asking for us to provide Voice on the Go on Bluetooth devices as they both address the same issue – texting or talking and holding a handset while driving is dangerous.” said John McLeod, CEO of Voice on the Go. “We see these partnerships as a natural combination of our two technologies. Texting and Driving is a significant and pervasive problem that Voice on the Go solves in conjunction with our Bluetooth headset partners.”

Voice on the Go is a safer alternative to typing or reading messages while driving as users can now listen to, compose, reply, forward and delete emails and send text messages, all by Voice. Voice on the Go enables cell phone users to access their contacts, place calls from their contact list, send Twitter “tweets” and update their Facebook profile – all Hands-free and by Voice. Instead looking at their phone and reading their email, users can drive more safely while listening to their email and keeping their hands on the wheel and eyes on the road.
